The Patthful Pallure."

By Rosamond Napier. Hodder & Stoughton. New York: George II. Doran Company.

The prologue of this unusual piece of liction is written in the form of a charming allegory which says:

"In one of the green alleys of Paradiae there was an angel. He picked up a feather that had just dropped from his wing, and, dipping it into a pool of sunlight filtering through the fragile loveliness of cherry bloom overhead, he wrote:

"Against Fir Maximilian's name was the word, remorse.

"Against Hillippa's, maternity."

"Against Phillippa's, maternity."

"Against Love and Aux's who were bracketed together, growth."
